WHY AND HOW INVESTORS SHOULD ACT ON HUMAN RIGHTS
THE SIX PRINCIPLES

PREAMBLE TO THE PRINCIPLES
As institutional investors, we have a duty to act in the best long-term interests of our beneficiaries. In this fiduciary role, we believe that environmental, social, and governance (ESG) issues can affect the performance of investment portfolios (to varying degrees across companies, sectors, regions, asset classes and through time). We also recognise that applying these Principles may better align investors with broader objectives of society. Therefore, where consistent with our fiduciary responsibilities, we commit to the following:

1. We will incorporate ESG issues into investment analysis and decision-making processes.

2. We will be active owners and incorporate ESG issues into our ownership policies and practices.

3. We will seek appropriate disclosure on ESG issues by the entities in which we invest.

4. We will promote acceptance and implementation of the Principles within the investment industry.

5. We will work together to enhance our effectiveness in implementing the Principles.

6. We will each report on our activities and progress towards implementing the Principles.

PRI’s MISSION
We believe that an economically efficient, sustainable global financial system is a necessity for long-term value creation. Such a system will reward long-term, responsible investment and benefit the environment and society as a whole.

The PRI will work to achieve this sustainable global financial system by encouraging adoption of the Principles and collaboration on their implementation; by fostering good governance, integrity and accountability; and by addressing obstacles to a sustainable financial system that lie within market practices, structures and regulation.

PRI DISCLAIMER
The information contained in this report is meant for the purposes of information only and is not intended to be investment, legal, tax or other advice, nor is it intended to be relied upon in making an investment or other decision. This report is provided with the understanding that the authors and publishers are not providing advice on legal, economic, investment or other professional issues and services. PRI Association is not responsible for the content of websites and information resources that may be referenced in the report. The access provided to these sites or the provision of such information resources does not constitute an endorsement by PRI Association of the information contained therein. Except where expressly stated otherwise, the opinions, recommendations, findings, interpretations and conclusions expressed in this report are those of PRI Association, and do not necessarily represent the views of the contributors to the report or any signatories to the Principles for Responsible Investment (individually or as a whole). It should not be inferred that any other organisation referenced on the front cover of, or within, the report, endorses or agrees with the conclusions set out in the report. The inclusion of company examples, or case studies written by external contributors (including PRI signatories), does not in any way constitute an endorsement of these organisations by PRI Association or the signatories to the Principles for Responsible Investment. The accuracy of any content provided by an external contributor remains the responsibility of such external contributor. While we have endeavoured to ensure that the information contained in this report has been obtained from reliable and up-to-date sources, the changing nature of statistics, laws, rules and regulations may result in delays, omissions or inaccuracies in information contained in this report. PRI Association is not responsible for any errors or omissions, for any decision made or action taken based on information contained in this report or for any loss or damage arising from or caused by such decision or action. All information in this report is provided “as-is” with no guarantee of completeness, accuracy or timeliness, or of the results obtained from the use of this information, and without warranty of any kind, expressed or implied.
CONTENTS

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY 4

INTRODUCTION 6
  DEFINING HUMAN RIGHTS 7

A GLOBAL FRAMEWORK ON BUSINESS AND HUMAN RIGHTS 8
  UN GUIDING PRINCIPLES ON BUSINESS AND HUMAN RIGHTS 9
  OECD GUIDELINES FOR MULTINATIONAL ENTERPRISES 10

INVESTOR INITIATIVES 10

HOW TO RESPECT HUMAN RIGHTS IN INVESTMENT ACTIVITIES 11
  A THREE-PART RESPONSIBILITY 12
  SEVERITY AND LEVERAGE 14
  INFLUENCING THE VALUE CHAIN 16

KEY RESOURCES 17

NEXT STEPS 18
EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Just as for all businesses, institutional investors have a responsibility to respect human rights. This responsibility was formalised by the UN and the OECD in 2011, and since then expectations – from employees, beneficiaries, clients, governments and wider society – have only increased. Expectations have been driven not only by growing visibility and urgency around many human rights issues, but also by a better understanding of investors’ role in shaping real-world outcomes, and of their responsibility to do so – across all their investment activities.

With regulation on human rights due diligence already implemented in some jurisdictions, more measures in the pipeline and policy making converging around the UNGPs and OECD standards, investors can future-proof their approach to ESG issues by implementing these frameworks now. Leading investors also recognise that meeting international standards – and preventing and mitigating actual and potential negative outcomes for people – leads to better financial risk management, and helps to align their activities with the evolving demands of beneficiaries, clients and regulators.

HOW TO RESPECT HUMAN RIGHTS IN INVESTMENT ACTIVITIES

Institutional investors have a three-part responsibility to respect human rights:

1. policy commitment;
2. due diligence processes;
3. enabling or providing access to remedy.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>POLICY</th>
<th>DUE DILIGENCE PROCESSES</th>
<th>ACCESS TO REMEDY</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Adopt a policy commitment to respect internationally recognised human rights</td>
<td>Identify actual and potential negative outcomes for people, arising from investees</td>
<td>Prevent and mitigate the actual and potential negative outcomes identified</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

To effectively implement the due diligence and access to remedy requirements, investors can use their investment decisions, stewardship of investees and dialogue with policy makers and other stakeholders. To understand their exposure and the actions required, investors need to request information from throughout the value chain: from their investment managers, other service providers and/or investees. Investors set expectations and influence others – to know, act on and show how they manage harm to people arising from their business activities and relationships.
NEXT STEPS FOR THE PRI

We are setting out a multi-year agenda for our work towards respect for human rights being implemented in the financial system.

The PRI will:

- support institutional investors with their implementation of the UNGPs through knowledge-sharing, examples and other practical materials;
- increase accountability among signatories, by introducing human rights questions into the PRI Reporting Framework – initially on a voluntary basis;
- facilitate investor collaboration to address industry challenges to implementing respect for human rights;
- promote policy measures that enable investors and investees to manage human rights issues;
- drive meaningful data that allows investors to manage risks to people.

The financial industry must play a critical role in facilitating sustainable development and growth, and in ensuring that people’s fundamental dignity and rights are upheld.
Institutional investors’ responsibility to respect human rights is defined – as for all other businesses – in the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (UNGPs). The UNGPs were formally and unanimously endorsed by the UN Human Rights Council in 2011, and immediately reflected in the OECD’s Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises. Since then, expectations – from employees, beneficiaries, clients, governments and wider society – have only increased, driven not only by growing visibility and urgency around many human rights issues, but also by a better understanding of investors’ role in shaping real-world outcomes, and of their responsibility to do so – across all their investment activities.

Failure to respond to these expectations can erode trust, jeopardising the financial industry’s social license to operate. Media, governments and citizens are questioning whether the global financial system serves its intended purpose, and the wider interests of society, if it fails to manage capital in a way that supports sustainable and inclusive economies. The climate emergency, decades of widening economic inequality and the COVID-19 pandemic are all drawing focus on investors’ behaviour.

Meeting human rights expectations leads corporates and investors to more effectively and proactively manage a range of complex environmental, social and governance (ESG) issues. Among social issues, we find employee relations, diversity issues, health and safety, community relations and forced labour – each of which are reflected in well-established international human rights instruments. Many issues that are often categorised as environmental or governance issues – such as access to water, tax fairness and climate justice – also have a clear human rights basis.

We have seen momentum in governments championing human rights and embedding their expectations of investors into law and regulation. The extent to which human rights are protected by states varies between jurisdictions, and where they fall short, business entities’ responsibility to operate to higher international standards remains. With further regulation on human rights due diligence in the pipeline, and policy making converging around the UNGPs and OECD standards, investors can future-proof their approach to ESG issues by implementing these frameworks now.

RESPECT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS IS FUNDAMENTAL TO ADVANCING THE SDGS

The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) set the global goals for societies and all its stakeholders – including investors – and are explicitly grounded in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights has explicitly mapped the overlap between the SDGs and human rights.

The implementation of the UNGPs across business and investment activities has the potential to deliver a transformational contribution towards achieving the SDGs. By addressing the full range of human rights, corporates and investors could, amongst other things:

- address gender-related issues connected to business activities, helping achieve up to eleven SDGs;
- provide workers with a living wage, advancing eleven of the SDGs;3
- eradicate forced labour from the value chain, contributing to the advancement of six SDGs.

This overlap between the SDGs and human rights does not detract from the inalienable nature of human rights themselves: the potential failure of companies or investors to prevent or mitigate harm to people cannot be offset by targeted initiatives to contribute to one or multiple SDGs.

The PRI has developed a five-part framework for Investing with SDG outcomes.
Leading investors recognise that meeting international standards – and preventing and mitigating actual and potential negative outcomes⁵ for people – also leads to better financial risk management, and helps to align their activities with the evolving demands of beneficiaries, clients and regulators. However, many institutional investors are either unaware or unclear on how to fulfil their responsibility to respect human rights.

This paper sets out the PRI’s expectation that investors respect human rights across all their investment activities, as defined by the UN and OECD.

For specific technical guidance, we direct investors to resources developed by the OECD and the Investor Alliance for Human Rights. We also outline upcoming initiatives to support signatories and address challenges to promote human rights in the financial industry.

Ensuring respect for human rights is central to achieving our 10-year Blueprint for responsible investment, which aims to bring responsible investors together to work towards sustainable markets that contribute to a more prosperous world for all.

DEFINING HUMAN RIGHTS

The idea of human rights is as simple as it is powerful: that people have a universal right to be treated with dignity. Every individual is entitled to enjoy human rights without discrimination – whatever their nationality, place of residence, sex, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, language or any other status. Human rights are interrelated, interdependent and indivisible.

Business enterprises’ responsibility to respect human rights is based on internationally recognised human rights – understood, at a minimum, as those expressed in the following instruments:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>International Bill of Human Rights (comprising the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights; the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and its two Optional Protocols)</th>
<th>International Labour Organization’s Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work and the eight core conventions</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>▪ Right to non-discrimination</td>
<td>▪ Freedom from forced labour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Right to health</td>
<td>▪ Freedom from child labour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Right to an adequate standard of living</td>
<td>▪ Freedom from discrimination at work</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Right to freedom of expression</td>
<td>▪ Freedom to form and join a union, and to bargain collectively</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Right to privacy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Right to a living wage</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Additional human rights instruments have elaborated on the human rights of people belonging to particular groups or populations – for example children, ethnic or religious minorities and indigenous people – recognising that they may need specific protection to fully enjoy human rights without discrimination. Some jurisdictions also have regional and national instruments with more stringent requirements.⁶

---

⁵ In this paper, we use the term “outcome” to refer what the UNGPs call “impact”. For investors, outcomes and impacts are commonly understood as distinct concepts. Outcomes can be intended or unintended, actual or potential, and may be caused by, contributed to or directly linked to the activities of investors. Investors (and particularly impact investors) often define “impact”, as being an actual “change in an outcome caused by an organisation”. See Impact Management Project section on norms.

The promotion and protection of human rights is articulated in international law. Initially the Universal Declaration of Human Rights sets out: “a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society […] shall strive […] to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance”. The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights go on to codify this standard in legally binding agreements between states. Together these three documents constitute the International Bill of Human Rights.

The reference to “every organ of society” was, however, typically interpreted as referring only to states, with the responsibilities of businesses – including institutional investors – not clearly defined. This changed with the unanimous endorsement of the UNGPs by the UN Human Rights Council in 2011. The UNGPs clarified that all business enterprises have a responsibility to respect human rights through a set of policy and process requirements. In 2013, the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) specifically clarified that the UNGPs apply to institutional investors.7

---

7 OHCHR response to Chair of the OECD Working Party on Responsible Business Conduct (2013)
UN GUIDING PRINCIPLES ON BUSINESS AND HUMAN RIGHTS

The UNGPs are the authoritative standard on corporate conduct on human rights. They are widely supported and adopted by states, regional institutions and multilateral organisations – and are a focal point around which policy around the world is converging.

- Member states on the Human Rights Council at the time of endorsement of the UNGPs included Brazil, China, Russia, Saudi Arabia, the UK and the US.
- Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Netherlands, Norway, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Tanzania, Thailand, Kenya, UK and the US – among others – have since incorporated the UNGPs in national action plans.8
- France has incorporated the expectations of the UNGPs in its Duty of Vigilance Law, and the EU and other members states are in the process of introducing similar legislation.
- Other countries and states have implemented due diligence legislation for specific human rights – for example Australia, California and the UK for modern slavery and the Netherlands for child labour.9

The UNGPs consist of three pillars

THE STATE DUTY TO PROTECT

States must protect against human rights abuse within their territory and/or jurisdiction, including by business enterprises. This requires taking appropriate steps to prevent, investigate, punish and redress such abuse through effective policies, legislation, regulations and adjudication.

THE CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY TO RESPECT

Business enterprises including institutional investors should respect human rights. This means that they should avoid infringing on the human rights of others and should address adverse human rights outcomes with which they are involved.

ACCESS TO REMEDY

Allowing affected people to seek redress for any harm that they have experienced as a result of business activities is an expectation of both states – through judicial and non-judicial mechanisms – and businesses – through grievance mechanisms.

---

8 A national action plan on business and human rights is a policy strategy to ensure that states adequately protect against negative human rights outcomes for people by business enterprises – see full list on the Danish Institute on Human Rights’ website.

9 See an overview of recent developments at the Business and Human Rights Resource Centre.
OECD GUIDELINES FOR MULTINATIONAL ENTERPRISES

In 2011, the same year that the UNGPs were unanimously endorsed, the OECD updated their Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises (Guidelines) to reflect the UNGPs as the global, authoritative standard on human rights. The Guidelines reflect the expectation from governments to businesses on how to act responsibly. They bring together all thematic areas of business responsibility, including human and labour rights.

The Guidelines are an international legal instrument that have been formally adhered to by 49 governments, making a formal commitment to promote them amongst companies operating within or from their territories. Businesses including institutional investors can be subject to complaint cases via an OECD National Contact Point (NCP) if they fail to meet the standards. This is a formal grievance process through which stakeholders may lodge allegations of non-observance. NCPs offer mediated dialogue on issues and publish statements describing the outcome of the proceedings.

After a number of NCP cases against institutional investors, in 2017 the OECD – following extensive collaboration with the financial industry – released detailed technical guidance on how institutional investors should comply with the Guidelines, including their responsibility to respect human rights.

INVESTOR INITIATIVES

There is also emerging momentum on human rights among institutional investors themselves:

- In the past five years, approximately 115 institutional investors with more than US$13 trillion of assets under management (AUM) have engaged with 100 companies through PRI-led collaborative engagements to improve human rights practices and disclosure, using the UNGPs as the reference.
- More than 180 PRI signatories apply to their investment portfolios various forms of screening referencing the UNGPs and/or the OECD Guidelines.
- A growing number of companies (currently 152) are disclosing information through the UN Guiding Principles Reporting Framework – an initiative backed by 88 investors with US$5.3 trillion in AUM.
- The Corporate Human Rights Benchmark – an investor- and civil society-led initiative – assesses the human rights performance of more than 200 of the largest publicly traded companies.
- An investor call for governments to legislate on mandatory due diligence for companies led by the Investor Alliance for Human Rights is currently supported by 105 investors with US$5 trillion in AUM.

Since the UNGPs were endorsed in 2011, the PRI has applied them as the overarching framework for projects relating to social issues, including PRI-coordinated collaborative engagements. While there has been significant progress made by some investors and companies in relation to human rights, investors – as part of their own human rights due diligence – can reinforce the need for corporates to better manage human rights risks and disclosure, in line with the UNGPs. This can better inform their own investment decision-making, stewardship activities and policy engagement – and ultimately improve outcomes for people.
HOW TO RESPECT HUMAN RIGHTS IN INVESTMENT ACTIVITIES

Institutional investors’ responsibility to respect human rights encompasses both their own operational activities – for example in relation to employees, clients, communities, and contractors – and the outcomes they are connected to through their investments. This paper focuses on the latter.

HOW INVESTORS ARE CONNECTED TO OUTCOMES

Investors’ focus should be on understanding a) which actual and potential negative human rights outcomes they are connected to through their investments, and b) how they are connected to them. This will determine what expectations there are on the investor to prevent and mitigate negative outcomes, and what role they should play in providing or enabling access to remedy.

There are three ways in which an institutional investor can be connected to a human rights outcome. There are outcomes that an investor:

- has caused – through its own business activities (e.g. outcomes on its own employees). An investor can “cause” negative human rights outcomes where its own activities remove or reduce someone’s ability to enjoy a human right. This will typically be in relation to their operational activities, but where the investor holds a controlling stake in an investee company (e.g. through the majority ownership model in private equity), it can also occur through their investment activities.

- has contributed to – a) through its own business activities where it is one of several contributors or b) through a business relationship or investment activity that induces or facilitates an outcome from an investee company or project. This could occur through investments when the investor holds high ownership stakes and could or should have known about harm, but preventive actions were insufficient.

- is directly linked to – through the activities, products or services of an investee company or project.

An investor’s connection to an actual or potential outcome will change over time. Three factors in particular will determine whether an investor can be said to have “contributed to” or be “directly linked to” a negative outcome:

- the extent to which an investor facilitated or incentivised human rights harm by another;
- the extent to which it could or should have known about such harm;
- the quality of any mitigating steps it has taken to address it.

Investors’ responsibility to manage actual and potential negative human rights outcomes in their portfolio does not replace the responsibility of the companies themselves, and vice versa. Companies will primarily be the ones causing or contributing to negative outcomes.

---

13 Activities include both actions and omissions to act
14 Danish Business Authority – Guidance on Responsible Investment (2018), p. 7 (in Danish)
A THREE-PART RESPONSIBILITY

Institutional investors should meet their responsibility to respect human rights by: publishing a policy commitment, having due diligence processes and enabling or providing access to remedy.

The policy commitment and due diligence processes should cover, at a minimum, the human rights included in the international legal instruments listed in the Defining human rights section above.

Institutional investors should embed their human rights policy commitment into their investment governance framework and management systems.

They can then use their investment decisions, stewardship of investees and dialogue with policy makers and other stakeholders to effectively implement the due diligence and access to remedy requirements, in line with the UNGPs and OECD Guidelines. These activities are expected even when states fall short in the protection of human rights.

Unlike investors’ traditional risk management systems – which focus on business risk, operational risk or financial risk – the core component is a focus on the risk of negative outcomes for people.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>STEPS</th>
<th>ACTIONS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>POLICY</td>
<td>Embed the policy commitment to respect human rights, approved at the most senior level, throughout the organisation with proper resourcing, and by integrating it in governance frameworks, management systems, investment beliefs, policies and strategy to inform investment decisions, stewardship of investees and policy dialogue.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DUE DILIGENCE PROCESSES</td>
<td>Investment decisions</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identify actual and potential negative outcomes for people, arising from investees</td>
<td>The management of actual and potential negative human rights outcomes should be reflected in the investment decision-making process, including in portfolio construction, security selection and asset allocation, and/or in selecting, appointing and monitoring external managers/funds and other services providers.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>■ Pre-investment: Investors should assess negative human rights outcomes of potential investees and set clear expectations about implementing the UNGPs, including with third-party investment managers. This is particularly important for illiquid assets as the investor will have limited opportunities to exit investments without experiencing financial loss and for index investing due to inability to sell specific shares.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>■ Post-investment: Investors should regularly identify actual and potential negative human rights outcomes associated with their investments, using and building influence to ensure that investees address them and track effectiveness. Where investment management is outsourced, appropriate monitoring and reporting should be in place.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prevent and mitigate the actual and potential negative outcomes identified</td>
<td>Stewardship of investees</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Track ongoing management of human rights outcomes</td>
<td>Using the rights and/or position of ownership in an asset – individually or in collaboration with other investors – to influence the activity or behaviour of existing or potential investees is necessary to prevent and mitigate negative human rights outcomes, and to enable access to remedy when an actual negative outcome has occurred and the investor is linked to it. Engagement and voting are key tools for this.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communicate to clients, beneficiaries, affected stakeholders and publicly about outcomes, and the actions taken</td>
<td>Dialogue with policy makers and key stakeholders</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Provide or enable access to remedy</td>
<td>Preventing potential negative human rights outcomes and mitigating and enabling access to remedy in cases of actual harm can require policy interventions, ranging from regulation on human rights performance and disclosure to specific socio-economic policies. Investors can work with others (e.g. policy makers, regulators, multilateral organisations and stock exchanges) to develop or influence market and industry standards that foster an enabling environment for investment that respects human rights. Responsibilities also include refraining from lobbying against positions or legislation seeking to improve protection of human rights.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Investors are responsible for providing access to remedy for people affected by their investment decisions when the investor is either contributing to or causing the negative outcomes. For outcomes the investor is directly linked to through an investee, the investor should use and build influence to ensure that investees provide access to remedy for people affected.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
SEVERITY AND LEVERAGE

The concepts of severity and leverage (meaning influence, rather than debt) are commonly used to guide investors to focus and sequence activities, and to determine which actions to take.

SEVERITY

While human rights cannot in themselves be ranked, assessing which actual or potential negative outcomes for people are most severe – in the context of specific business activities or investments – can help prioritise which issues to deal with first. This does not limit the overall responsibilities to manage all adverse human rights outcomes over time.

Assessment will include reviewing the scale of the outcome (on an individual right(s)), the scope (number of individuals affected) and the irremediable character (any limits on the ability to restore those affected to a situation at least equivalent to their previous situation).

The severity of human rights issues should be assessed from the perspective of potentially impacted stakeholders – whose inputs are important in that process – rather than in terms of financial materiality. There can, however, be overlaps: while the focus of human rights due diligence processes is the risk to people, it can pick up issues that, left unaddressed, would go on to become financially material. Assessing a company’s human rights due diligences process can therefore also be a good way to assess its overall governance and potential future financial risk.

LEVERAGE

Institutional investors need to be able to influence investees and other stakeholders to change the wrongful practices of another party that is contributing to or causing harm. The UNGPs and OECD Guidelines refer to this as “leverage”. Investors can exercise, and build, leverage through all of the actions in the table above – through their investment decisions, stewardship of investees and dialogue with policy makers and key stakeholders.

Options to influence an investee while invested vary across investment instruments. For some financial instruments, leverage can (and therefore should) be applied both pre- and post-investment.

- Equity investors will have more direct mechanisms for influence through stewardship activities and proxy voting rights.
- Private equity investors with board positions and negative control rights will have greater direct influence, including the option to replace management.
- Sovereign bondholders often have limited influence and are restricted by sovereign entities being principally accountable to their citizens.
- Investors in illiquid assets (except where strong ownership mechanisms exist such as in private equity) will often have limited leverage even once invested, so should pay closer attention to identifying human rights risks and to articulating expectations pre-investment.

If an investor lacks leverage, it should seek ways to increase it, including through collaboration with other investors. While stewardship is just one way that investors can exercise and build leverage, investors that are used to engaging – individually or collectively – with companies on ESG issues will be familiar with the mechanisms.

If the investor is unable to establish enough leverage to alter the behaviour of the investee sufficiently to prevent or mitigate a negative outcome, and there is no prospect for improvements, they could consider whether they can justify staying invested. The severity of negative human rights outcomes and the human rights consequence of divesting should, however, always be considered first.

15 The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (1993) states human rights globally should be treated “in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing, and with the same emphasis”.
As a last consideration, the investor will need to consider how crucial the investment is for their investment strategy or portfolio from a financial perspective. An investor might not be deemed able to fulfil their given mandate – for example pension provision – if they divest or exit, or where they are subject to asset allocation requirements. In such cases – i.e. where the investor cannot establish enough leverage to address a negative human rights outcome and is unable to divest – they should document the steps taken and their reasoning for continuing to stay invested, and communicate this to clients, beneficiaries, affected stakeholders and other relevant parties. They should be ready to justify their approach and decision, and to accept the potential consequences – reputational, financial and legal – of their continued investment.
INFLUENCING THE VALUE CHAIN

All entities in the value chain can be connected to human rights outcomes, and therefore have a responsibility to respect human rights: to manage actual and potential negative outcomes for people.

To understand their exposure and the actions required, asset owners need to request information from their investment managers, other service providers and/or investees, as relevant.

The flow of information allows, for example, a pension fund with outsourced investment management to be aware of the human rights outcomes that they are linked to through their portfolio. As human rights due diligence is often lacking, investors should actively work to fill information gaps, through service providers, NGOs, governments, media, trade unions and affected rightsholders or their representatives.

Simplified value chain: investors set expectations and influence companies to know, act on and show how they manage harm arising from their business activities and relationships.

In practice the value chain – and the flow of information and capital – is often further complicated through the use of investment consultants, fund-of-funds, benchmark administrators, engagement providers, stock exchanges or other financial intermediaries.

Nevertheless, asset owners are in the position to set expectations and influence the practices of third-party investment managers, service providers and investees (who all have an independent responsibility to respect human rights).
The responsibility set out in this paper builds on recognised international standards, such as the UNGPs and the OECD Guidelines. We provide a high-level overview of expectations, and highlight the following guidance documents for further technical details and examples of how to implement respect for human rights in investment activities:

- Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD)'s Responsible Business Conduct for Institutional Investors helps institutional investors implement the due diligence recommendations of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, in order to prevent or address adverse outcomes – related to human and labour rights, the environment and corruption – in their portfolios.

- The Investor Alliance for Human Rights (IAHR)'s Investor Toolkit on Human Rights provides investors with a step-by-step framework, along with checklists, templates and case studies from investors for each step.
In the midst of a global climate emergency, escalating inequality and the COVID-19 pandemic, many voices are calling for a more people-focused economic and societal model. This is paramount to address the inadequacies and unsustainable nature of our current financial and economic system. International human rights standards, the SDGs and the Paris Agreement are the universal frameworks that must shape the sustainable economic recovery and the system reforms that the world needs.

We are therefore setting out a multi-year agenda for our work towards respect for human rights being implemented in the financial system.

THE PRI WILL:
- support institutional investors with their implementation of the UNGPs through knowledge-sharing, examples and other practical materials;
- increase accountability among signatories, by introducing human rights questions into the PRI Reporting Framework – initially on a voluntary basis;
- facilitate investor collaboration to address industry challenges to implementing respect for human rights;
- promote policy measures that enable investors and investees to manage human rights issues;
- drive meaningful data that allows investors to manage risks to people.

We will work with signatories and key partners to deliver on this work programme to ensure that our financial and economic system respects both the boundaries of the planet and the rights of its people. The financial industry must play a critical role in facilitating sustainable development and growth, and in ensuring that people’s fundamental dignity and rights are upheld.
CREDITS

AUTHORS:
- Bettina Reinboth, Head of Social Issues, PRI
- Nikolaj Halkjaer Pedersen, Senior Specialist, Sustainable Markets, PRI

EDITOR:
Mark Kolmar, PRI

DESIGN:
Will Stewart, PRI
The Principles for Responsible Investment (PRI)

The PRI is an investor initiative in partnership with UNEP Finance Initiative and the UN Global Compact.

The PRI works with its international network of signatories to put the six Principles for Responsible Investment into practice. Its goals are to understand the investment implications of environmental, social and governance (ESG) issues and to support signatories in integrating these issues into investment and ownership decisions. The PRI acts in the long-term interests of its signatories, of the financial markets and economies in which they operate and ultimately of the environment and society as a whole.

The six Principles for Responsible Investment are a voluntary and aspirational set of investment principles that offer a menu of possible actions for incorporating ESG issues into investment practice. The Principles were developed by investors, for investors. In implementing them, signatories contribute to developing a more sustainable global financial system.

More information: www.unpri.org

The PRI is an investor initiative in partnership with UNEP Finance Initiative and the UN Global Compact.

United Nations Environment Programme Finance Initiative (UNEP FI)

UNEP FI is a unique partnership between the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the global financial sector. UNEP FI works closely with over 200 financial institutions that are signatories to the UNEP FI Statement on Sustainable Development, and a range of partner organisations, to develop and promote linkages between sustainability and financial performance. Through peer-to-peer networks, research and training, UNEP FI carries out its mission to identify, promote, and realise the adoption of best environmental and sustainability practice at all levels of financial institution operations.

More information: www.unepfi.org

United Nations Global Compact

The United Nations Global Compact is a call to companies everywhere to align their operations and strategies with ten universally accepted principles in the areas of human rights, labour, environment and anti-corruption, and to take action in support of UN goals and issues embodied in the Sustainable Development Goals. The UN Global Compact is a leadership platform for the development, implementation and disclosure of responsible corporate practices. Launched in 2000, it is the largest corporate sustainability initiative in the world, with more than 8,800 companies and 4,000 non-business signatories based in over 160 countries, and more than 80 Local Networks.

More information: www.unglobalcompact.org